The state of the European and UK Gas market is a story of two halves. Can the UK cope with the current pressures brought about with the winter summer spread and how we can become more flexible to meet the strains? Also, developments in Eastern Europe are a continued concern to the security of supply and with Gazprom securing nearly all of Germany's gas storage capacity what is in store for the future of Europe's gas storage and transmissions industry?

These are just some of the many questions and discussions that will be had at SMI's 9th annual Gas Storage and Transmission Conference, taking place on 17th – 18th June in London, UK.

Gas Storage and Transmissions 2015 will provide its delegates with an information packed agenda with representatives from across the industry giving a comprehensive overview of the market, looking at the current state of the European Gas market and security of supply, gas transmission and how gas storage will contribute to future demand, new commission regulations, the flexibility of the UK market, south stream and more.

Benefits of attending:
