At the core of corporate social responsibility (CSR) lie the commitments by corporations to conduct themselves ethically and to ensure sustainable economic progression. However, with the rise of globalisation, the composition of CSR within organisations is being shaped by multiple actors. The implication of this is the increasing transfer of governance responsibilities from governments to global multiple actors such as multinational corporations (MNCs), international-developmental organisations and global non-governmental organisations (NGOs). Thus the globalisation of businesses has had fundamental implications for the governance of CSR.

The purpose of this special issue was therefore to promote research that focuses on corporate and behavioural governance, corporate social responsibility, enterprise risk management, business and financial ethics, corporate law and securities law, role of board committees and board of directors, financial reporting, disclosure, transparency and information asymmetry.

After a careful selection and development process, we are proud to offer to IJMED community of readers' five papers.

I would like to express our great gratitude to the International Journal of Management and Enterprise Development for this great publication cooperation.
