Scope of the Journal

ISSN: 1755-4500 (Print), ISSN: 1755-4519 (Online)

Today's medical and healthcare systems have become increasingly computation-intensive due to the demands of digital medical data and rapid developments in IT technologies/methodologies. IJCMH meets the need for publications addressing translational and/or transformative scientific research in medicine and healthcare. It is a forum for medical researchers, computational scientists, engineers and other professionals, and processes research papers and reports of medical studies on medical scientific discoveries, innovative engineering design and applications for healthcare system improvement using data and computational systems.

Topics covered include:

- Large-scale computing/computations
- Mathematical multi-scale modelling/simulation
- Clinical translational science/technology-oriented computing/computations
- Large-scale net-centric based information systems
- Systems architecture, integration/implementation, system of systems
- Open systems architecture, interface protocols for interoperability
- Digitalisation/standardisation
- Interoperability/sustainability
- Electronic medical/patient records
- Data transfer metrics, distributed systems, networks/communications
- Workflow management, operational research/optimisation
- Intelligent computing, data mining
- Service computing (web/grid/cloud), data-intensive computing
- Data security, patient confidentiality
- Data visualisation/display, data representation/reconstructions
