Scope of the Journal

ISSN: 1754-2316 (Print), ISSN: 1754-2324 (Online)

The rapid evolution of network industries such as telecommunications, energy, air transport and more, driven by market liberalisation, technological innovation and sustainability imperatives, is reshaping global economies. IJMNE adopts a transdisciplinary approach to network economics, exploring the interplay among economic systems, value chains and digital ecosystems. By addressing ecological transitions, digital transformation and the Sustainable Development Goals, the journal provides insights for financial markets, public authorities and businesses seeking innovative, sustainable and resilient strategies in an increasingly interconnected world.

Topics covered include:

- Antitrust and network regulatory policy, contract design
- Network competition, interconnection and market efficiency
- Cooperative networks, joint ventures, strategic alliances and licensing
- Network economics, financial risk management and investment strategies
- Entrepreneurship, franchising and new business models in network industries
- Innovation, IT governance and e-network management
- Digital transformation: AI, blockchains, smart contracts and DeFi
- Network externalities, industrial organisation and multi-sided platforms
- Sustainable networks: green finance, carbon markets and responsible investment
- Smart infrastructures: renewable energy grids, mobility and circular economy
- Supply chain networks, resilience and technological change
- Quality management, performance metrics and service network optimisation
- Network management, pricing strategies and economic regulation
- Network internationalisation, global strategies and policy implications
- Virtual and cluster networks in digital and industrial ecosystems
