Much research has been devoted to improving manufactured product quality and manufacturing process efficiency. With recent advances in computer and network technologies, sensors, control systems and manufacturing machines, manufacturing research has progressed to a new level. In addition, new research areas in manufacturing are emerging to address problems encountered in the evolving manufacturing environment. IJMR has been established to report state-of-the-art and new developments in modern manufacturing research, and publishes innovative methodologies and solutions to problems challenging today's manufacturing operations.

Contents:

IJMR publishes original research papers, literature review reports, case studies of current interest, and book reviews. Special Issues devoted to important topics in manufacturing research will also be published occasionally.

Topics covered include:

- Process modelling and simulation
- Computing and numerical analysis
- Process design and optimisation
- Production planning and scheduling
- Sensors and control technologies
- Measurement data processing
- Robotics and automation
- Web-based technologies
- Artificial intelligence in manufacturing
