The matrix of laws and regulation which were established at the beginning of the nuclear industry does not lend itself to uniform categorisation. Nuclear law is in a continuous state of flux in order to adjust to technological developments and to manage the issues associated with their use. Considered as a reference work for both professionals and academics in the field of nuclear law, IJNuCL provides up-to-date information on all major developments falling within the domain of nuclear law.

Topics covered include:

- Origins, uniqueness of nuclear law
- Legislative process
- Regulatory bodies, licensing, inspection, enforcement
- Radiation protection, emergency preparedness/responses
- Nuclear safety/regulation/prevention; management of nuclear accidents
- Convention on Nuclear Safety and the
- Concept of Nuclear Safety Culture
- Convention on Early Notification and the
- Convention on Assistance
- Trade/transport of nuclear materials/equipment
- Specificity of nuclear trade rules
- Constraints imposed on international nuclear trade by nuclear export control regimes
- Competition/deregulation: competition law in the nuclear field
- Reliability of contractual relations in international nuclear trade
- Legal status of repositories for long-lived radioactive waste
- Nuclear liability/cover
- International law issues raised by global terrorism
