Scope of the Journal

ISSN: 1756-6975 (Print), ISSN: 1756-6983 (Online)

Both 'quality' and 'innovation' play vital roles for businesses to remain competitive. Broadly-speaking, quality aims for high and sustainable performance in existing business areas, while innovation aims for breakthrough. Both concepts are in some ways mutually dependent, yet mutually paradoxical. IJQI serves as a multi-industry platform to address issues of quality and innovation facing businesses, especially how quality and innovation may be integrated into a coherent and powerful strategic package, and the dilemmas/tensions faced in pursuing quality and innovation concurrently.

Topics covered include:

- The strategies and integration of quality and innovation
- The dilemmas and tensions of quality and innovation
- Leadership and management issues in achieving quality and innovation
- Socio-cultural issues in quality and innovation
- Training and education issues in quality and innovation
- Change management in achieving quality and innovation
- Risk and cost of quality and innovation
- Technologies, techniques and tools for quality and innovation
- Performance indicators for quality and innovation
- Quality assurance systems and innovation frameworks
- Innovative solutions for quality challenges
- Quality platform for innovation and breakthrough
- The relationship between quality and innovation and other disciplines such as knowledge management, total quality management and organisational learning
- National policies for quality and innovation
- Quality and innovation through industry-university collaboration
